The Genuine Honda Timing Belt (just the belt) does come with a sticker (or at least it did when I did my first replacement on my '99). And on the tech noticing a sticker or not, I don't believe a single word from what the sales guy said, so it's worth checking. BTW, I still remember when we bought the '99, new from a dealership.

In order to keep that timing going perfectly, your Honda Odyssey has a timing belt, which is a rubber belt held in place by pulleys. Those pulleys in turn are held by tensioners, which are controlled by the engine's water pump. A timing belt will need to be replaced more often than a timing chain, but they tend to be quieter and, on their own, are generally less expensive to replace as well.
