Decentralization, Democratic Governance, and Civil Society in Comparative Perspective surveys a range of issues in decentralization: which actors in each country have been most responsible for decentralization, how much decentralization has transformed the state; and whether stronger local governments produce greater accountability to citizens.

Decentralization, Democratic Governance, and Civil Society ...
The unsatisfying riposte to all these solutions may be that we simply have to wait for true network decentralization and wholesale democratic network governance. True decentralization often emerges from the roots of centralization, and in order to reach the next phase in decentralized networks, a period of centralization may be first necessary.

Democracy and Governance | MSI
Democratic decentralization is the process of devolving the functions and resources of the state from the centre to the elected representatives at the lower levels so as to facilitate greater direct participation of citizens in governance. Devolution, envisioned by the Constitution, is not mere delegation.

Democratic Decentralisation in India - Drishti IAS
According to one definition: "Decentralization, or decentralizing governance, refers to the restructuring or reorganization of authority so that there is a system of co-responsibility between institutions of governance at the central, regional and local levels according to the principle of subsidiarity, thus increasing the overall quality and effectiveness of the system of governance while increasing the authority and capacities of sub-national levels."

Decentralization - Wikipedia
On the one hand it is undoubtedly part of the state, but on the other hand it can appear as a relatively autonomous sphere of government that is close to if not part of civil society. As such, achieving effective local governance is crucial to the project of democratic decentralisation.
