In 2001 Hilary Robinson published Feminism-Art-Theory 1968-2000: An Anthology with Blackwell's. The aim of the anthology was to chart the debates that occurred in the intersection between the women's movement and the art world, while at the same time disrupting the canons that were beginning to form, and the USA/UK dominance of the field.

While most feminist theorists throughout history have been women, people of all genders can be found working in the discipline today. By shifting the focus of social theory away from the perspectives and experiences of men, feminist theorists have created social theories that are more inclusive and creative than those that assume the social actor to always be a man.
