"With both of the upper shock mounts removed you can move on to the fender rails. Using an 8 and 6mm allen break all 3 of these bolts loose but remove only the front and back fender rail bolts, leaving the middle 8mm bolt in place. With the front and back bolts removed the chrome fender rails will come off while the middle 8mm bolt will still hold the fender itself in place.

Removing the fender itself is not a problem, you just take the bolts out. The problem is all the wiring, which is contained INSIDE the license plate bracket/light assembly. All the connections for the rear turn signals, license plate light, tail light, and brake light are stuffed, and I do mean stuffed, inside a small compartment in the bracket.

There is a wire harness there that goes into the fender. Unhook that. Remove the two middle bolts from the fender. (By this, I mean there is the shock bolt, two bolts that go through the strut to the fender, and one that is only in the strut). At this point, you can lift it out. You may have to squeeze the fender a bit on the bottom to get it out.
