The Reprieve (French: Le sursis) is a 1945 novel by Jean-Paul Sartre .
It is the second part in the trilogy The Roads to Freedom. It concerns life in France during the eight days before the signing of the Munich Agreement and the subsequent takeover of Czechoslovakia in September 1938. Sartre explores the reactions of numerous characters to the possibility of war.

The Reprieve - Wikipedia

The Reprieve is a stunning, dazzling novel; Sartre's most powerful, yet subtle and complex. In a few hundred pages, many stories are told in such depth and with such tender feeling as to distinguish the novel alone, but at the same time the narrative offers so much more, both philosophically and literarily.

The existentialist Jean-Paul Sartre wrote his trilogy Roads to Freedom to portray French society and how his philosophy applies to such a pursuit. In The Reprieve, the second volume of the series, he depicts the lives of people from the full spectrum of the social strata as the threat of war with Germany looms over their heads.

Jean-Paul Sartre: The Reprieve — Moonshake Books. Sartre's Roads to Freedom trilogy took a dynamic shift in tone following on from the Age of Reason. Inspired by the likes of Virginia Woolf, the French philosopher decided to try his hand at simultaneous prose. The result is the Reprieve, which is a chilling psychological examination of a nation prior to outright warfare.

The writing is more connected than in the Reprieve (thankfully) but then it does feel as if the whole of France has come to a standstill. The dialogues are brilliant - Sartre has a wonderful ear for conversation and the way people express themselves.
